

Dear Colleagues,

I would like to appreciate your continued interest in the RPHB content. Coming back to this platform and providing your feedback brings growth and allows us to produce more relevant content in following issues.

As the world progresses towards a post-pandemic era with the global introduction of vaccines, it is my hope that most health care workers/ public health experts are resuming their routine work. The bulletin therefore seeks to keep you informed and updated on the most pressing national and global issues and progresses as well as innovations.

This issue contains information on the implementation and success story of Rwanda's COVID-19 vaccination roll outs, 2019-2020 Rwanda Demographic and Health Survey (RDHS) key findings on HIV/ AIDS and child health as well as nutrition.

To continue to enlarge the community of Rwanda's local public health writers, the bulletin is organizing a workshop to train trainers on scientific writing. This approach will help to ensure that more local-publishable contents are available to sustain the bulletin. A formal invitation, an agenda and application details will shortly be shared after the release of this issue on the RPHB website.

We hope that once you have completed this training, you are able to produce publishable contents and consider the RPHB a platform worth sharing your work on.

Until next, enjoy your read!

Sincerely,
